What we do

Pauline and Andy ended up homeless after Pauline had some medical issues that landed her in the hospital. They couldn't keep up with their bills. While at Twin Oaks, Pauline grew stronger and healthier. Andy was looking for a job when they moved in and he was able to secure a full time job. Now that Pauline was feeling better, she started looking for a job, too. She was able to secure work as a CNA.

Chuck and his wife built their rural Delavan home thirty years ago. At the time, an all-electric heating system was the most cost-efficient. After Chuck's retirement it became increasing hard to pay the utility bills, which sometimes exceeded $1,000 a month. Chuck would close off parts of the house to save money. He noticed the number for Energy Assistance on his utility bill, and connected with Community Action's Weatherization program. Based on information from an energy audit, Community Action converted the heating system to propane, saving hundreds of dollars a year.

Housing, employment, community outreach, child care, health classes: we help our friends and neighbors meet basic needs.

The Beloit mother celebrating her son's first birthday in an apartment subsidized by our Rapid Rehousing program. A year earlier, she had been living in a tent.

The Janesville father who used the Fatherhood Initiative to get back on track with employment, housing and support to control his drug addiction and become productive again. Six months later, he is still employed after being without a job for years.
